

TECHSHIP INTERNSHIP

Day 7- Styling, Props, State Management, Dynamic Routing & API Integration

Submitted By : Kelna Sebastian

During Day 7 of the TECHSHIP Internship Program, I learned how Props and State are used in React and Next.js to create dynamic and interactive applications. Props helped me understand how data can be passed between components, making components reusable and easier to manage. I also strengthened my understanding of State using the useState hook, which allows user interfaces to update dynamically based on user interactions.

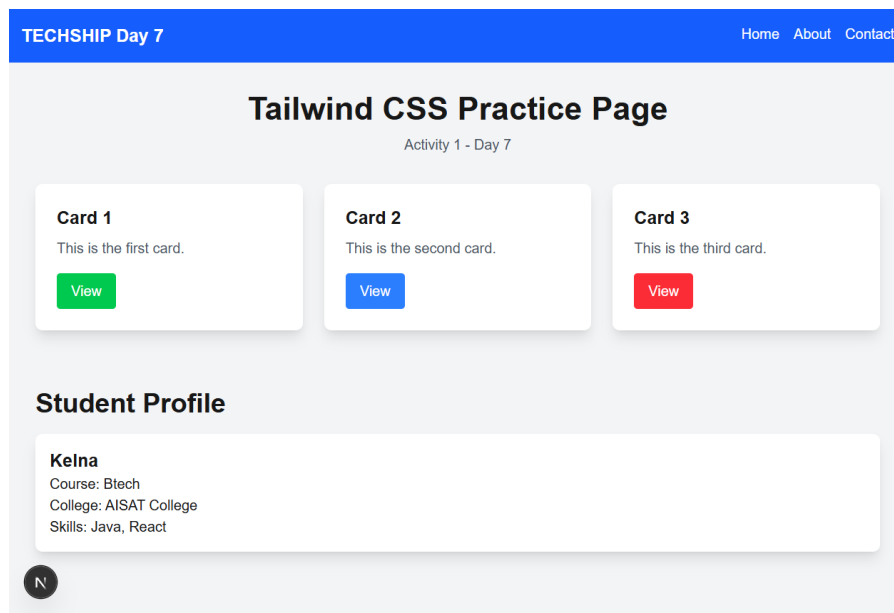

Working with APIs was an interesting experience. I learned how to fetch data from external sources, process JSON responses, and display the retrieved information within a web application. This helped me understand how modern applications communicate with servers and external services.

One of the main challenges I faced was implementing Dynamic Routing in Next.js. Understanding route parameters and displaying different content based on URL values required careful practice. However, after experimenting with examples, I gained a better understanding of how dynamic routes work and their importance in building scalable web applications.
